To learn more about CLSs, read this recent story published in Lo Que Pasa:

than 40 faculty across eight units have taught in the CLSs. It’s also compelled him to have a greater willingness to experiment. “The creativity is more on Mars, teaching more than 170 students in the CLS “has pushed me to do new things, to be more creative, and to AGTM 422, Communicating Knowledge in Agriculture & Life Sciences, in the largest CLS on campus. According to

Since 2014 the University has been overhauling traditional learning spaces into classrooms designed for active

Collaborative Learning Spaces

On the same theme of supporting one another, a group of business and HR liaisons from Cooperative

Kylee Vanek, Gilbert Walker, Dan Nelson, and Marsha Murphy (running to the picture).

Mills, Peder Cuneo (who bled in support), Steve Husman, Carol Starbuck, Scott Going, Jeffrey Ratje,

My deepest and heartfelt thanks to:

Environmental Quality and is a symbol of the stewardship obligation that exists in CALS. We have a remove 7.2 cubic yards of glass bottles left behind from a research project conducted on the property in

Page Ranch, a CALS’ property near the Biosphere 2. On November 3, 13 people pulled together to

Supporting One Another

Project:

Patricia Stock; Professor of Entomology

Towards Making a C3 Crop C4 by Adding an Oxygen-Binding Protein in Rubisco’s

Harnessing an Arizona-Native Insect Pathogenic Bacterium for Natural Products with Medical

Thank you to the

Mike Staten on “Collaborative Learning Spaces”

Parker Antin on “CALS Innovation Venture Investment Program”

Gayatri Vedantam and V.K. Viswanathan were also of an

Jeffrey Ratje on “Supporting One Another”

Parker Antin on “CALS Innovation Venture Investment Program”

Midway through the semester when a resignation left three courses without an instructor, three

Shane Burgess on “My Inspiration” support for your colleagues. Gayatri Vedantam and V.K. Viswanathan were also of an expertise already present among our senior faculty who have served on study sections and the grant review panels for the major funding agencies. And thank you to those of you who are giàn inspiration daily from all of our employees who come together to aid colleagues who are in a

You are my inspiration.

Through all these efforts – and more I may never hear about (but I need to, so please let me know), you reflect on the care and communication you received your first

Guests: Marc Orbach, vice-chair of the CALS Faculty Council, and Anthony Silva, associate dean of research.

Dial-the-Dean on January 22

Check out the other authors submitted to the Journal of Entomology & Beneficial Biological Control.

In this edition:

University of Arizona

Forbes 306

View this email

Got this as a forward?

Share this email: